Society needs to broaden its understanding of loss and grief. There are many kinds of losses capable of evoking a grief response and, true to grief form, these responses vary from person to person and differ in duration, depth, and complexity. Many types of losses are capable of causing complicated emotions, difficulties in daily functioning and impairment in one's ability to move forward. I don't think that one can fully understand grief until they expand their definition to be inclusive of all types of loss. First, because losses need to be dealt with before they start piling on. Next, many of these losses occur as secondary losses after a death so it's important to understand how dynamic our situations might become when we have multiple losses to reconcile. Return policy. Understanding Herd Dynamics. What are your horses' pasture behaviors telling you and what can you do to help groups live together harmoniously? Posted by Christa Lest-Lasserre, MA | Jul 3, 2016 | Article, Behavior. For nonresearchers though, herd dynamics can be determined through regular observations over time. Intermittent checks on your horses once or twice a day won't give you an accurate picture, says Hartmann. You'll need to sit and observe frequently. Plus, relationships can develop and change over weeks, months, and years. "A horse is not born dominant and will not have a dominant position all its life," Hartmann says.
