And her conversations, like her movements, are imbued with the elegance and self-awareness of a woman who has looked deeply inward and come up feeling more or less okay. But she wanted a partner. She still does. And so do I. Each week for this newspaper I write the story of two people who met, fell in love and married. When I sit down with couples, they often say things like, "When you know, you know." And I believe them. Again and again, she catalogued all the men she has known, trying to figure out if she missed something in one of them. "But I can't look at my past and think, 'He's the one who got away,'" she says. And she feels equally confident in her decision not to pretend some wrong guy was the right one.

Long live Christmas! - say pickpockets, car thieves and burglars getting their share of Christmas shopping through the dirty business of relieving decent citizens of their fully deserved possessions. Every year thousands of people get their wallets stolen in overcrowded shops and streets. Lots of lovely presents, which somebody spent so much time and money on, disappear without a trace when cars and homes are broken into. As much as 9% of people experience a burglary in December. Last year 44,000 homes were broken into costing insurers 47 million pounds.
