Education is not an independent variable in an economic growth equation. In its broadest sense, it is a fundamental aspect of, and prerequisite for, human existence. No more fundamental question about society can be asked than how we are to be educated. Do you want to read the rest of this chapter? Request full-text. The chapter first addresses the practice of homeschooling among the early American settlers. Then the nation's industrialization and the movement away from homeschooling becomes the focus. John Dewey argued that industrialization should naturally cause the parent's role to decrease and the teacher's importance to surge. American school system. Education is not mentioned in the Constitution, nor is there any federal department of education, so the matter is left to individual States. Education is free and compulsory in all States, however, from the age of 6 till 16 or 18. So, most American children go to State schools. In the USA these are called public schools. The history of education in the United States has certain peculiarities which are closely connected with the specific conditions of life in the New World and the history of the American society. The early Colonies and different politics of education for the first white settlers who came to North America from Europe in the 17th century brought with them the educational ideas of the time most typical of the countries they represented.
