Richard III has come down in history as a villain, and the man that killed his nephews to get hold of the crown of England. But the opinion of him has been divided since his own time. Others saw him as a victim of his time, a man that did his best for kingdom and family, a noble prince, always loyal to his brother Edward IV. Then we come to the question with a big Q: the Princes in the Tower. The facts are brought out, but the question who killed the Princes, is not answered. It probably never will be. After Richard III's coronation on July 6, 1483, it was clear that not everyone accepted that the princes were illegitimate. And so long as they lived, they remained a focus of opposition and division. So Richard did have a motive to kill the princes, just as his brother, Edward IV, had killed Henry VI, the king he had deposed. The mentally ill Lancastrian Henry VI was found dead in the Tower in 1471. It was said he had died suddenly of "grief and rage" over the death of his son in battle.
