"Women's rights are human rights" is a phrase used in the feminist movement. The phrase was first used in the 1980s and early 1990s. Its most prominent usage is as the name of a speech given by Hillary Rodham Clinton, the First Lady of the United States, on 5 September 1995, at the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing. In this speech she sought to closely link the notion of women's rights with that of human rights. In the speech, Clinton used the phrase within the longer Labour Party Activists Call for Women's Sex-Based Rights to be Upheld. Karen Finlay - November 17, 2019. Breaking News. They are something else, an accessory maybe, prey often, object always, but they are never, never humanized. For us to class women as human we would have to treat them as such, would have to treat them according to the tenets laid down by the Human Rights Act, established in 1948 by the United Nations after the horrors of the Second World War.

Women's rights activists mobilized to ensure that women's human rights were fully on the agenda of the international community under the rallying cry "Women's Rights are Human Rights." Particularly around the issue of violence against women, civil society activists organized tribunals to put the spotlight on violations of women's rights, previously unaddressed because they were considered part of the private sphere, taboo or simply accepted as an inevitable part of women's lives.
