World War I, the first "total war" in history, set in motion profound changes in the economies, demographics, and philosophies of the warring states. In this book, leading experts on the Great War discuss its causes, character, and legacy.Â Site of the defining revolution of the twentieth century, source of the great socialist schism, it has generated charged historiographies in the competing traditions of the left. Many of the issues that feature in those histories remain centralâ€”such as the collapse of the Second International, socialist â€œpacifism,â€ industrial protest, the two Russian revolutions in 1917, and revolutionary potential elsewhere.Â CHAPTER 9 The War, the Peace, and the International State System. (pp. 263-298). ZARA STEINER. The first half of the century, the age of the World Wars and.Â This local crisis rapidly engulfed all the powers of Europe through the mechanisms of the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente, diplomatic arrangements meant precisely to enhance the security of their members and to deter potential aggressors. The long-term causes of the war can therefore be traced to the forces that impelled the formation of those alliances, increased tensions among the great powers, and made at least some European leaders desperate enough to seek their objectives even at the risk of a general war. Subsequent events of the twentieth century urge to appreciate the wisdom of the notorious note of Peter Nikolaevich Durnovo (he will later be described by Soviet historiography as an arch-organizer) addressed to the Sovereign on the eve of the war, literally on the eve of it. From this note, it is clear that Durnovo foresaw both the revolution and literally everything that Russia would survive.Â And the beginning of such changes, in the opinion of documentaries, was laid by the letter of the Russian ambassador in Paris, Baron A.P. Moorenheim, from 1886. To the surprise of the Russian central department, he reported that in the event of a possible clash between France and Germany, Britain would support France.
