As grand unveilings go, the appointment of John Cridland as director-general of the Confederation of British Industry was hardly shrouded in mystery. The CBI gamely played along with the charade of secrecy - the placecard in front of the new man's empty chair bore a question mark rather than a name. But the appointment had leaked out over the weekend and Cridland's presence in the second row of the press conference, clutching his notes, wa... Fancy living the Costa Del Celebrity life? The project culminated in an exhibition of memorabilia and photographic portraits of City interviewees at the Bank of England Museum, and in the publication of the book City Lives: The Changing Voices of British Finance (Methuen, 1996). Although the original concept was broader, the project quickly focused its aims on the recording of Jewish Holocaust survivors in Britain, which at that time had been neglected.^[9] This project (helped with funding secured through Martin Paisner and the Edith and Ferdinand Porjes Charitable Trust) culminated with the publication of an educational pack, Voices of the Holocaust (British Library, 1994) edited by the life stories of British Photographers (An Oral History of British Photography) is carried out by the British Library's Oral History.
