Auditory integration training (AIT), is a procedure pioneered in France by Guy BÃ©rard, who promoted it as a cure for clinical depression and suicidal tendencies, along with what he said were very positive results for dyslexia and autism, although there has been very little empirical evidence regarding this assertion. It typically involves 20 half-hour sessions over 10 days listening to specially filtered and modulated music. It was used in the early 1990s as a treatment for autism; it has been an endless process, proper training benefits the organization, the existing employees and the new entrants as well. The following are the important advantages of training programme for employees in an organization: 1. Better Performance. A sound training programme results in better performance of the employee both in terms of quantity and quality of output. 2. Lesser Learning Period. The learning time is considerably reduced by training. With the help of training, the best available method of performing the work can be standardized and made available to all employees. Standardized procedures will ensure peak level of performance. 5. Elimination of Misfits. As stated already, mere selection and induction are not sufficient to procure proper personnel for the organization.
