What's different about a speech? Writing for public speaking isn't so different from other types of writing. You want to engage your audience's attention, convey your ideas in a logical manner and use reliable evidence to support your point. But the conditions for public speaking favor some writing qualities over others. When you write a speech, your audience is made up of listeners. They have only one chance to comprehend the information as you read it, so your speech must be well-organized and easily understood. Speeches and writings by David S. Ferriero Archivist of the United States Speeches and writings by Debra Steidel Wall Deputy Archivist of the United States Speeches and writings by Adrienne Thomas Acting Archivist of the United States.

Age. Speech goes back to human beginnings, perhaps a million years ago. Writing is relatively recent, however; it was first invented by the Sumerians, in Mesopotamia, around 3200 B.C. Since then, the idea of writing has spread around the world and different writing systems have evolved in different parts of the world. Universality. Humans everywhere can speak. But before the Sumerian invention, people were nonliterate. Even now there are many nonliterate groups (e.g. in New
