parent power

PARENT POWER. Crisis At The Chalkface. Simon Marginson. Private schools are becoming steadily more popular with parents. And public education's supporters have been left flat footed. The reason, argues Simon Marginson, is that the left has had very little to say about parenting.Â Parent power is here. Parents see themselves as people with the right and the responsibility to make decisions about education. This active concern is not in any way confined to middle class parents. Parent Power. In my experience~ parents can be your best friend or your worst enemy. As a teacher~ it really comes down to how you deal with them~ particularly in how you communicate with them and respond when they have questions or concerns. I never understood when colleagues created an us against them type of situation with parents. Dont get me wrong. Ive had those parents that make you want to quit the profession.
