To study of politics is significant human activity and we should enquire into the past. Facts about the past are sought and it is concerned with the origin, nature, development and evolution of ideas, institution and process. This is the basic purpose/aim of historical approach. Knowledge regarding organised existence in the past provides the background to our understanding of politics as it has evolved. History thus supplies the accumulated wisdom of the past, its success and failure. Documents Similar To Approaches to the Study of Political Science. The political acceptance of adaptation policies " which are generally anticipatory and planned by central powers " presupposes the adhesion of both principles of precaution (anticipation of future and uncertain impacts of climate change) and state leadership on societal aspects that were left unregulated until now. I see only two manners to counter the political barriers that I illustrated in my study. First, is to improve the accuracy of regional impact models but also the societal communication of the scientific results. Indeed, one of the most important things I have noticed during my research and the interviews I conducted with stakeholders and decision makers is that there is still a gap between raw previsions of impacts modelled and their possible translation into real life situations. Keywords: political discourse, power, ideology, Linguistic Adaptation Theory, dynamics of adaptability, Saliency of adaptability. 1. Introduction. Politics is a struggle for power in order to put certain political, economic and social ideas into practice. 3. The Objective of the Study. This research aims at discussing the realisation of "identity" by means of language use in a political discourse which is mainly grounded in Jef Verschueren's LAT. For this aim, the discursive strategies of the political advertising messages of the Mauritania candidate, Ahmed Dadeh, presidential election discourse in 2009 will be examined within the context of his ideological, cultural and language background. 4. The Significance of the Study.

In the study of politics we have two major approaches. These are the traditional and behavioural approaches. Traditional approach to the study of politics. Traditional approach involves the prescription and justification of political ideals or values, the historical description of governmental institutions and laws and observations of actions and activities. There are four approaches under the traditional approach. The historical approach.Â The post behaviouralist emphasis substance rather than techniques, core realities rather than abstraction, social and political problem orientation and social and policy relevance.
