Ronald Wright. Ronald Wright argues that humankind has been repeating the same mistakes over and over. What's more, each time history repeats itself, the price goes up. Starting from the recognized truth that the 20th century's runaway growth in population, consumption, and technology placed a colossal load on all natural systems, Wright demonstrates that this seemingly modern predicament is as old as civilization itself -- a 10,000-year experiment humans have participated in but seldom controlled. Only by understanding the patterns of human triumph and disaster, he says, can the exp A short history of man. It's a brief survey, overview, and criticism of the pattern you spend a lot of time talking about during your history degree: The agricultural revolution, specialization, social hierarchy, and how these snowball into environmental annihilation that leads to societal collapse. Jared Diamond's books ("Guns, Germs and Steel," specifically) first blew my mind in this area, but I wish I'd actually read this book back in 2005; it's loaded with information and sources, laid out in a very accessible way, and written with the an effective mix of compassion sternness.
