Washington, D.C.: Magination Press, 2008. Summary:

Bibliotherapy can be used as an attempt to help young people understand themselves and cope with problems by providing literature relevant to their personal situations and developmental needs (Betzael & Shechtman, 2010). When reading Counting on Frank, he may relate to the character and emulate his attitudes/methods for coping with his feelings as well as using the strategies presented for being proud of his mathematic prowess. Books can help educators guide the emotional development of their students far more than intellectual discussion because stories directly affect human emotions (Rozalski, Stewart, & Miller, 2010; Furner, 2004; Forgan, 2002; 2003). A skillful author can help young people connect with others who have similar problems. The specific problem is: Bibliotherapy is a form of psychotherapy. Libraries in hospitals for sick patients, and "therapeutic storytelling" are not bibliotherapy. When placing this tag, consider associating this request with a WikiProject. In its most basic form, bibliotherapy is using books to aid people in solving the issues that they may be facing at a particular time.[11] It consists of selecting reading material relevant to a client's life situation.
